

Invitation to Nordic Global Health Talks #12:

Is migrant health important for global health?

Speaker: Soorej Jose Puthooppambal, Uppsala University

Thursday 3 February 2022, 14.00 am CET

Register online on Zoom here

About the talk

Migration and migrants are often considered to be a polarising and heavily discussed topic. Is migrant health important in the context of Global health? Is it a challenge? If so why and for whom? This talk will elucidate the key aspects related to migrant health and whether migrant health is an important aspect of global health. The talk will also discuss how host countries and migrants can contribute to each other's better health and wellbeing.

About Nordic Global Health Talks

Nordic Global Health Talks is a monthly webinar series about global health research at Nordic universities, hosted by the Nordic Network on Global Health. It is free and open to everyone interested in knowing more about Nordic global health research, education, and collaborative projects. Tune in the first Thursday of each month at 14.00 pm Copenhagen-time and listen to a 30 minutes inspiring talk, followed by 15 minutes Q&A.

Read more about future Nordic Global Health Talks on the event website here.